THE DAILY
PACIFIC COMMERCIAL ADVERTISER

Be just and fear not;
Let all the ends thou aim'st at be
Thy Country's, thy God's, and Truth's.

FRIDAY, MAY 29, 1891.

WE HAVE been requested to correct the statement made in the short sketch of General Marshall, published on Tuesday, that it was not Sir George Simpson who was acting consul at the time of the seizure of these islands by Lord Geo. Paulet, and who went to England in the ship with General M., but Alexander Simpson, a nephew of Sir George. The latter was agent of the Hudson Bay Company, and a warm friend of the Hawaiian King and Government, and on more than one occasion rendered valuable service to them.

The report of the investigations made by the grand jury at New Orleans, regarding the killing of eleven Italians by a vigilance committee of the citizens, which was made public May 5, shows a worse condition of affairs than anything that has before been published. Among other statements made by it was the information furnished by the Italian Consul himself, that he had on the books of the Consulate the names of eleven hundred Italian and Sicilian immigrants, who were classed as criminals, with the specific crimes of each. It also gives the record of ninety-four assassinations committed in that city by this same class, every one of which escaped conviction. With such a record, is it any wonder that the citizens of New Orleans rose up en masse to execute punishment for offences which the courts from some cause failed to reach? The wonder is that they endured this scourge as long as they did.

DREDGING THE BAR.

By the courtesy of Mr. Dyer, the representative of the Bids-on Work, we are able to give, in some detail, an account of the dredging apparatus which we hope to see at work on the bar of this harbor within the next six months. The original scheme is in the main closely adhered to, that is, to cut a passage through the bar which shall have a clear depth of 30 feet, and width of 200, the length of passage which must be cut, will be about 1,200 feet, and there will be 9 feet of depth to be got necessitating the removal of from 75 to 100,000 cubic yards of matter.

A plant has been contracted for, consisting of a suction dredger, with a guaranteed capacity of 60,000 yards of sand or mud per month, and will discharge the dredged matter through 200 feet of piping to the retaining walls on the reef. The machinery consists of a pair of compound condensing engines, 225 indicated horse-power, with two sixty-inch tubular boilers, each 16 feet long, to work the centrifugal pump.

The pump for handling the mud has a five-foot runner and discharges through a fifteen-inch pipe line 300 feet long of which 1,000 will be on floating pontoons between the dredge and the reef, the rest on trestles on the reef. These pontoons and the pipes they carry can be easily disconnected and reconnected if necessary, the pipes being connected by flexible joints, the mud or sand being forced from the pumps through the pipes the solid matter being held in suspension by the velocity of the water in the pipes.

The cutter will be a steel drum about five feet diameter and five feet long on the end of a shaft projecting from the scow at an angle of forty-five degrees and can be raised or lowered to any desired depth. The suction pipe to the pump is secured to a ladder which also carries the cutter shaft, and the end is fitted to project into the cutter drum. The cutter gear is driven by an independent pair of engines.

The dredger hull and pontoons will be built here of timber. The former being about one hundred feet long, forty feet beam and nine feet deep, drawing four and half feet of water. The necessary lumber has been ordered from the Sound and should be here in a few weeks, when the construction will be begun at once, and in six months the dredge should be at work. The trestle will be built at the same time.

The Risdon guarantees the dredge to clear away the bar, and if the whole passage be as reported by the last survey, six months' work should suffice for its removal.

SMOKE IN THE SOUTH SEAS.

Tons of Opium Smuggled Into the Hawaiian Kingdom.

THE HALCYON AS A FLY-BY-NIGHT.

(From S. F. Examiner.)

Hawaiians are of the opinion that all the well-laid plans of Collector Phelps and Varney Gaskill to intercept the famous smuggling yacht Halcyon and capture one of the heaviest cargoes of opium that ever left Yokohama will go for naught. Down in the Paradise of the Pacific they have an idea that the Halcyon has unloaded an immense cargo of the drug on Liliuokalani's kingdom without paying the $500 per pound duty and that the United States revenue cutters can cruise about the California coast until their coal bills make the Treasury Department sick without capturing a single teal.

The Merchants' Exchange correspondent at Honolulu sent up word by the Australia that the Halcyon had been hovering around the islands for a month. For three weeks her identity was in doubt, as she started her sheets and ran away every time any of the inter-island vessels approached her. Scarcely a day passed but some sugar boat reported sighting her, and often she was fitting ghostlike through the night with all lights extinguished. Twice she was seen at anchor, with her yawlboat industriously plying between ship and shore, and finally all doubt was removed by her being recognized by a San Francisco captain who had often sailed against her when she was the pleasure boat of Joseph Grant and Robert Morrow.

A BIG DROP IN OPIUM.

Opium began to pour into the island villages, and the price dropped from $75 to $25. With the identity of the mysterious schooner once settled, the Hawaiian Customs authorities concluded that the source of the opium influx had something to do with the Halcyon and ordered an armed expedition out to bring her into port. The steamer Claudine was pressed into service, and at 10 o'clock on the night of April 27th she left Honolulu, carrying a thirty-man Royal Guard, six policemen and twelve picked sharpshooters, all doubly armed and under the command of the revenue officers. Scarcely had she cleared the harbor than three mysterious fires sprang up on the mountain back of Honolulu. Other fires had been seen on various peaks during the schooner's presence in Hawaiian waters, and for the first time it occurred to the authorities that they might be intended as signals to the smugglers. Messengers were hurriedly dispatched to the fires; they found them burning unwatched, but with all the evidence of having been carefully prepared so as to secure the greatest amount of blaze from the material.

Of course the Claudine did not catch the Halcyon. She cruised steadily for a day and a half, often hearing of the yacht in a "last week" sort of way, but never laying an eye on her smart hull and racing canvas.

TOO SMART TO BE CAUGHT.

It was the 2d inst before she was heard of as having returned to the islands. Then the steamer Hawaii passed her hove to at the south end of Maui, with lights on and the useful yawl boat making a fast trip to the shore. Another cruise was made in search of the Halcyon, but the result had not been made known at the time of the Australia's sailing. It was commonly expected to prove futile, however, for the vessel, according to rumor, completed her discharging on Maui on the 2d and cleared out for good before daylight.

The Halcyon's managing owner, John D. Whaley, who arrived in Honolulu from Yokohama by one of the Japan tramps that came to this port two months ago, expected to leave by the Australia up to the day of her sailing, but could not wind up his business in time. One knowing individual announced the sale of the parties engaged in handling the opium and getting it to market had taken advantage of the circumstances to refuse payment, knowing that there was no means of forcing them to do so.

SAVED FROM THE JAPANESE.

Anyhow Mr. Whaley remained over for another boat. On this trip the Halcyon went ashore twice in the Japan sea after clearing with her cargo, which the Japanese Government seized each time. The managers pulled through on both occasions without aid from the American Consul, and no matter what their expenses were, the profit must have been enormous, unless the "hold out" of the Hawaiian middlemen was pretty nearly a total.

Many interesting incidents occurred during the flooding of the islands with the drug. Maui, Molokai and Lanai appeared to be the favored spots for landing it, and it required considerable ingenuity after this was accomplished to get it to Honolulu, Hilo and other centers of population. A few days before the Australia sailed T. E. Evans, a business man of Honolulu, was arrested for receiving two trunks from Lanai consigned as crockery. A few days before the Australia sailed T. E. Evans, a business man of Honolulu, was arrested for receiving two trunks from Lanai consigned as crockery.

Off Koko Head, near Honolulu, a native fisherman had his attention attracted by a floating log with a line trailing from it. He hauled in the line, and at the end of it captured sixty tins of opium in an oilskin wrapping.

MANY SEIZURES MADE. A dozen seizures of the drug were made in various places, and it was so thick that the Hawaiian papers credited the Halcyon with importing 450 tons of it. This is somewhat extravagant, as the Halcyon only measures sixty-three tons, and could not possibly carry over one hundred.

But the Halcyon does not seem to have been alone in the business. From all accounts the Annie Harley, from this port, seems to have come very near to skinning the cream off the venture by getting in with three or four tons of opium just prior to the Halcyon's appearance. The Harley is a little twenty-three ton schooner built over on the Marlin shore five years ago, and used for a time as a butter boat. She disappeared from here about the 1st of February without clearing. Suddenly she popped up at Hilo, with a distress signal flying. Parties who answered the signal found that the flow of the leak shown as its excuse could have been bailed with a hat, and the story that she was a sealer, bound for Behring sea and blown out of her course, was received with distrust, especially as there was not a sign of a sealing boat or gun aboard, and her provisions were limited to a barrel of sauerkraut, a side of bacon and a box of hard bread. W. Platt was in command, and the only crew he had consisted of two islanders, one a Captain Larsen and the other an island navigator. Larsen owns a ranch on the opposite side of Oahu from Honolulu; and after lingering here for a day or two the Annie sailed into Honolulu and was offered for sale. Captain Platt arrived on the Australia yesterday, but he came steaming, and escaped before an interview could capture him. Larsen came up the same way in January and sailed down with him on the Harley.

To those who need a pleasant Tonic for any kind of debility, we can recommend Clements' as the best. For sale by HOLLISTER & Co.
